The Cape Fear Valley Scottish Festival, held in Fayetteville <sup>[6]</sup> on 19-24 Nov. 1939, commemorated the 200th anniversary of the arrival of the Scottish Highlanders in the Cape Fear Valley as well as the 150th anniversary of North Carolina's ratification of the U.S. Constitution <sup>[7]</sup>, the cession of the western lands that became Tennessee, and the chartering of the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill <sup>[8]</sup>. Dignitaries including Governor Clyde R. Hoey <sup>[9]</sup> spoke at the festival, but its lasting legacy was that playwright Paul Green <sup>[10]</sup> wrote The Highland Call, <sup>[11]</sup> the second of his outdoor "symphonic dramas," for the occasion. The play dealt with the Scottish settlement in the Cape Fear Valley and was a blend of history, music, spectacle, and social commentary. A second Scottish festival was held from 14 Oct. to 2 Nov. 1940, but despite ongoing interest in Cumberland County <sup>[12]</sup>'s Scottish heritage, the festival did not remain an annual event, being overshadowed by similar festivals elsewhere in the state.
