Our State Geography in a Snap: landforms and regions

Landforms: There are three distinct landforms of the Southeast and of North Carolina: the Coastal Plain ^[3], the Piedmont ^[4], and the Appalachian Mountains ^[5].

- The Coastal Plain ^[6] is low, flat to gently sloping land that extends along the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico. Much of the Southeast lies within in the Coastal Plain.
- The Piedmont ^[7], ^[8] characterized by hilly, rolling land, borders the Coastal Plain. The Piedmont extends from Virginia to Alabama.
- The Appalachian Mountains ^[9], the largest range in the eastern United States, stretch from Canada to northern Alabama.

Regions: ^[10] The three landforms of North Carolina make up the three major geographic regions of the state: the Coastal Plain ^[11], the Piedmont ^[4], and the Mountains ^[12]. The Coastal Plain Region is usually divided into two sub regions: the Outer Coastal Plain, commonly referred to as the Tidewater; and the Inner Coastal, which is less impacted by the effects of the ocean as it is located further inward.
