Description: The monument is a simple design of a gray stone marker on a two-level base. The front of the monument is decorated with a single star, the insignia of the 20th Corps, and commemorates the Union soldiers killed in the battle of Averasboro. The back of the monument lists the companies involved in the battle. The monument was proposed and designed in the early 2000's by Averasboro Battlefield Commission, Inc.

Materials & Techniques: Granite

Sponsor: Donated by Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Edgerton.

Cost: $2000

Post dedication use: The Averagesboro Battlefield hosts many events throughout the year, including battle re-enactments.

Subject notes: Approximately 650 Union soldiers were killed in the Battle of Averagesboro, many of them members of the 20th U. S. Army Corps, also known as Hooker's Corp. The men of the 20th Corps were under the direction of General Sherman.

Location: The monument is located on Averagesboro Battlefield. Several other monuments to the battle are located nearby. These include: a monument to the North Carolina Soldiers erected by the United Daughters of the Confederacy, a monument to the Confederate dead erected in 1872 in nearby Chicora cemetery, and a monument to the South Carolina troops involved in the battle. In addition, the 20th Corps monument was designed and dedicated with a companion monument dedicated to the fallen Confederate soldiers under Rhett's Brigade of General William J. Hardee's army. This is located in close proximity to the 20th Corps monument.

Landscape: The monument is a part of Averagesboro Battlefield, which also includes the Averagesboro Battlefield Museum and historic plantation houses. The Battlefield is also home to Chicora Cemetery, which holds 57 Confederate soldiers killed in battle.
