Selection as State Irish Potato Festival

The bill to make the North Carolina Potato Festival the official Irish Potato Festival of North Carolina was backed by Rep. Bill Owens of Pasquotank County and Sen. Charlie Albertson of Duplin County. The bill was introduced in the House in March, and was signed into law in May of 2009.

About the North Carolina Potato Festival

The North Carolina Potato Festival began in 1940 as the Albemarle Potato Festival. The first festival included a parade and the Potato Queen beauty pageant. The Albemarle Potato Festival continued sporadically until 1970 when it ended permanently. It was revived in 2001 as the North Carolina Potato Festival, and is now the largest festival in Northeastern North Carolina.

The three-day festival includes many notable activities, including the National potato peeling contest, the Little Miss Tater Tot pageant, a 5K run, cornhole and potato sack tournaments, an auto & bike show, boat races, and a United States Coast Guard search & rescue demonstration. Occurring throughout the festival is the street carnival with food, arts & crafts, and 'spudtacular' rides. Over 12,000 people attend the festival, which is usually held in mid-May.

The potato is an important crop in Northeast North Carolina. As of the bill's adoption in 2009, North Carolina harvested 16,000 acres of potatoes statewide, 12,000 of which was in the Northeast portion of the state. Potatoes provide North Carolina up to $16 million dollars in sales. The average American eats 142 pounds of potatoes every year.

Whereas, the festival entertainment, street fair, water activities, and evening dance draw attention throughout the northeast region; and

Whereas, the tourism industry flourishes during the North Carolina Potato Festival, benefiting the economy of not only the northeast region but also the entire State; Now, therefore,

The General Assembly of North Carolina enacts:
