^[7]In 2013, the General Assembly designated the Blue Monday Shad Fry in East Arcadia the Official State Blue Monday Shad Fry (Session Laws, 2013-282 ^[8]).

Selection as State Blue Monday Shad Fry

The bill to name the East Arcadia Blue Monday Shad Fry the official Blue Monday Shad Fry of North Carolina was proposed by Reps. Bill Brisson and Ken Waddell of Bladen County. It encountered little opposition, and was passed by the house with a vote of 117 to 0.

About the East Arcadia Blue Monday Shad Fry

The East Arcadia Blue Monday Shad Fry festival celebrates the shad's spawning in the Cape Fear river and the beginning of spring.

Blue Monday an Eastern North Carolina term for the day after Easter. According to legend, slaves on Eastern Carolina plantations had to work on Easter Sunday, but they were given Easter Monday off. As this was prime shad season, the slaves would go down to the Cape Fear river banks on Blue Monday and have a fish fry feast.

The modern iteration of the Blue Monday celebrations began around 1950 when Chester Graham, Archie Graham, and Bernard Carter started an annual Easter Monday fish fry on the riverbank for their family. Though it started with just immediate family, it wasn't long before it was a neighborhood event, and eventually a community event. The celebration became a time when those who had moved out of town would come back to visit family. Today, over 1,000 individuals attend the celebration from more than six different states.
