Buck dancing is a folk dance ^[4] that originated among African Americans ^[5] during the era of slavery. It was largely associated with the North Carolina Piedmont ^[6] and, later, with the blues ^[7]. The original buck dance, or "buck and wing," referred to a specific step performed by solo dancers, usually men; today the term encompasses a broad variety of improvisational dance steps.

In contemporary usage, "buck dancing" often refers to a variety of solo step dancing to fiddle-based music ^[8] done by dancers primarily in the Southern Appalachians. Among North Carolinians, buck dancing is differentiated from clogging ^[2] and flatfooting by the use of steps higher off the floor, a straight and relatively immobile torso, and emphasis on steps that put the dancer on his or her toes rather than heels.
