Culture Week

by H. G. Jones, 2006

Culture Week brought together annually an unusual assemblage of North Carolina historical and cultural organizations from the late 1930s to around 1970. Under the supervision of the State Literary and Historical Association ^[2], some of the state's cultural elite went to Raleigh ^[3] and spent the entire week at the Sir Walter Hotel ^[4], usually the headquarters for the participating groups. Art and historical exhibitions, poetry ^[5] readings, musical concerts ^[6], performances ^[7], recitations, addresses, and presentation of art, history, literary ^[8], and other cultural awards ^[9] filled the week. With tongue in cheek, Jonathan Daniels ^[10], then the editor of the Raleigh News and Observer ^[11], accused fellow North Carolinians of trying to imbibe all of their culture in one week so they could ignore it the remainder of the year. Rather than taking offense, C. Christopher Crittenden ^[12], secretary of the Literary and Historical Association from 1935 through 1967 and thus chief coordinator of the various meetings, appropriated Daniels's term "Culture Week" as the unofficial designation of the annual assemblage.
