The Durant Bible, printed in London in 1599, is considered to be the book that has been in North Carolina longer than any other. It was owned by George Durant ^[3] (1632-94), a pioneer settler in the Albemarle ^[6] section of the colony and a colonial official. The Bible has a dark brown leather binding that is probably not the original one; it measures 6 inches wide, 8½ inches long, and about 3 inches thick. It contains many marginal notes of births, deaths ^[7], marriages ^[8], and other events. Some entries have been torn out, however.

The Bible was apparently passed down, through marriage, to the Reed (or Reid) family. Members of the Reed family gave the Bible to Professor Charles Force Deems ^[9] of the University of North Carolina ^[10] faculty when he requested it sometime between 1844 and 1857, and it later came into the possession of the Historical Society of North Carolina at UNC. It is now held in the UNC Library's North Carolina Collection. ^[11]
