Esse Quam Videri [1]

by Daniel W. Barefoot, 2006

Esse Quam Videri, the state motto of North Carolina, is a Latin phrase meaning "to be rather than to seem." Its origins are traced to Cicero's essay titled "Friendship." Distinguished jurist and historian Walter Clark selected the state motto and drafted the bill for its adoption in 1893. Senator Jacob Battle of Nash County introduced the bill in the General Assembly, and upon its passage the legislature directed that the motto be engraved on the great seal and coat of arms of the state. Prior to that time, the independent state of North Carolina had never adopted a motto. It was one of the very few American states and the last of the original 13 without one. Until North Carolina declared its independence, the colony maintained on its great seal the Latin phrase Quae Sera Tamen Respexit. Referring to the figure of Liberty on the seal, these words meant "Which, though late, looked upon me."

References:

Walter Clark, "Our State Motto and Its Origin," North Carolina Booklet 9, no. 3 (January 1910).

Additional Resources:

Image Credits:

Subjects:
Slogans, slang, and sayings [14]
State Symbols [15]

Authors:
Barefoot, Daniel W. [16]

Origin - location:
Nash County [17]
From: