Raleigh grew very slowly and experienced several devastating fires in the early nineteenth century. The arrival of the railroad <sup>[17]</sup> in 1840 spurred some development, and the city limits were expanded for the first time in 1857. A new capitol building to replace the statehouse that had burned in an 1831 fire opened the same year the railroad was completed.

The Civil War <sup>[18]</sup> brought an end to Raleigh's midcentury economic boom. In April 1865 the city was occupied by Union forces after surrendering peacefully, avoiding the destruction suffered by many other southern cities. Like the rest of the postwar South, however, Raleigh-and all of North Carolina-struggled to overcome the economic devastation of the war. Important in the city's later development were several colleges established in the second half of the nineteenth century, including Shaw University <sup>[8]</sup> (1865), Meredith College <sup>[4]</sup> (1891), and modern-day North Carolina State University <sup>[7]</sup> (1887). A new governor's residence <sup>[19]</sup> was completed in downtown Raleigh in 1891.

came in 1907. A number of suburbs, reached by trolley lines, sprang up outside of the original boundaries. The city experienced significant growth during the First <sup>[21]</sup> and Second <sup>[22]</sup> World Wars, and in the second half of the twentieth century, the expansion of state government and the development of the Research Triangle Park <sup>[23]</sup> brought an influx of people and businesses to the area. Cary, directly adjacent to Raleigh, became one of North Carolina's most populous cities. Many new state buildings were constructed, including a new Legislative Building <sup>[24]</sup> completed in 1963.
