

Secotan ^[1]

Secotan

A watercolor drawing of the village of Secotan prepared by John White from observations he made in 1585-86 while a member of the Ralph Lane expedition. Trustees by William S. Powell, 2006 of the British Museum.

Secotan was a large village of Algonquian-speaking Indians that was encountered in July 1585 along both banks of the Pamlico River ^[2] by Sir Richard Grenville ^[3], an explorer sent by Sir Walter Raleigh ^[4]. The village was documented in a detailed watercolor drawing by John White ^[5] in 1585-86. Titled "Indian Village of Secotan" ^[6], the drawing depicts a well-ordered village with family units, storehouses, fields with growing crops, and individuals performing different tasks. In 1690, Bath ^[7], the first town of English settlers in North Carolina, was established in the vicinity of Secotan, which had been abandoned by the Indians.
