

Western Carolinian <sup>[1]</sup>

Western Carolinian

by Wiley J. Williams, 2006

The Western Carolinian was founded in Salisbury on 13 June 1820, with Jacob Krider and Lemuel Bingham <sup>[2]</sup> as editors. The western counties of North Carolina, more sparsely populated than those in the east, had long needed a newspaper <sup>[3]</sup> to voice its desire for equal representation in the state <sup>[4]</sup> legislature <sup>[4]</sup> and otherwise serve its interests. Salisbury, as the region's largest city, was an ideal location for such a paper. In most antebellum <sup>[5]</sup> political newspapers, national politics received the majority of the editorial attention, but the Western Carolinian was a leader in

The obvious determination of western North Carolina—so forcefully confirmed on the pages of the Carolinian—led other editors to take sides on these issues, which included the establishment of a public school system <sup>[7]</sup> and a public college in the west, internal improvements <sup>[8]</sup>, the convening of a constitutional convention, the need for a state penitentiary, the care of the handicapped, and free suffrage for all white males. Although it changed hands and political affiliations several times, the Western Carolinian remained a strong advocate of the economic growth and political rights of western counties until it ceased publication in 1844.
